This seminar is designed for junior practitioners who are starting out in public law and human rights, or those wishing to enhance their skills in bringing and defending human rights claims. It will be a practically focussed workshop, delivered by experienced practitioners who will explore the key legal and tactical decisions involved, including: the scope of public actions covered, available remedies, choice of claimant, funding, and evidence. Each presentation will be interactive and followed by a Q&A session.

There is no charge for this event
